Fashionable Weddings, China and Dances as Conducted or Possessed in the Swell Set.

The lady who gives a breakfast, dinner or luncheon just at present must supply herself with a set of serving plates. These are pretty plates which are placed in front of each guest and left there during the meal, all the several courses being placed on the plate. This is an old custom revived, as so many of the customs are, and ft has its practical and useful side, and that is that it keeps the cloth clean, if there be a cloth, and it keeps the polished table from getting white spots from hot dishes. These serving plates come in beautiful designs, so that they may be admired, while the dishes for the course, which are covered with whatever is served, need not be such things of beauty. The very latest in china is the royal Copenhagen, that is in opalescent hues, with a translucent effect gained by a fine underglaze. This china is in plain designs, the colors being all that is necessary to make it beautiful. The several sets of a dinner service has some design for each course peculiar to the course

The mothers of large families of daughters would not have such difficulty in arranging the season's wardrobe if the daughters dressed alike, as they do in some countries. In Yucatan, Central America, sisters dress precisely alike, even to the tying of a bow, the turn of a button or the flower in the hair. In the tropics large families are the rule, and any day you may see in that country girls in groups of from three to a baker's dozen who belong to the same fam-ily, as their clothes will show. It is thus easy to distinguish the members of a family anywhere, and not infrequently sisters are called by their favorite flower or color. In Anam men and women wear their hair in the same way and dress almost alike. women only. Lapp men and women dress alike. The men and women of the Cree will come Tuesday to visit Mrs. Frank New-Earrings and finger rings are worn by tribe of Indians dress alike, but can be distinguished by the ornamentation of their leggings, that of the men being vertical and that of the women horizontal.

The professors of dancing seek every year to bring out some novelty that will suit the popular taste, but the fact is that all the new dances for the coming summer are nothing but waltzes with a few varying There is a very pretty measure stepped off now under the rather ambiguous title of "La Pavaune." A man and woman stand abreast of each other. She puts her right hand on his waist, he puts his left on her waist, and they face a couple similarly standing; then, as the music plays some such quaint air as "Money Musk," or "The Wind That Shakes the Barley," they advance, retreat, and, at the sound of returning waltz time, whirl off about the room. Immediately the waltzing stops they halt, fall into the original position and advance and retreat before the first couple they find themselves nearest to. Sometimes, in place of the waltz music, a lively galop is played, and something of the jolly romping known in the days of "Little Sallie Waters" is revived.

There are scores of suggestions for a fancy paper dress party in the wonderful new crepe papers that have just been brought out. The papers come in boxes. and are highly decorated in colors and gold and silver. They are made for the fancy lamp shades with their fluffiness, loops and frills, but for a fancy dress they would be beautiful. The same kinds of paper are used in place of silks and satin in the furnishings and hangings of a dainty bedroom. Real artistic skill has been brought to bear in the creation of beautiful designs in paper for these uses, and they are pretty enough to make a woman become a purchaser before she has any idea as to what use she will put it to after she gets it.

The latest etiquette for a wedding after Easter is given in a leading Eastern paper

Easter weddings are the prettiest weddings in the year, and they do say that there's no bride so lucky as an Easter There are just two sorts of Easter weddings: The right sort and the wrong sort. The wrong sort costs a lot of money and is stupid and ugly. The right sort is easy enough, if you only know how. Here are a few of the "hows:"

The preparations for a wedding in the family fail, as a rule, on the mother. The first duty, after the trousseau has been completed, is the making out of a list of friends on both sides of the house. No matter whether people live in San Francisco, Yokohama or St. Petersburg, if you know them and count them as your friends, you must not reglect to send them a card of invitation to the church or house, or simply an announcement as the case

It is the custom for a bride's family to quets to bride and bridesmaids, bouton- by Prof. H. C. Garvin. nieres and very often gloves and souvenir scarfpins or cuff buttons for ushers and best man, fee to sexton, carriages for the groom. Awning at the house, collation, the house, music at the house, or any other liam P. Kappes. incidental expense there is paid for by the Miss Lucy Will

There is some talk of reviving this spring the old way of arranging a bridal proces-sion, first brides maids and groomsmen, then the bride with her father, etc. The present fashion of having the groom and best man standing at the altar has its disadvantages. They sometimes have to "cool their heels" many a long moment before the bride appears. Electric bells and signals of all kinds have so far failed to prevent these

Another old custom has entirely gone out. That of the bride going up the aisle with her veil over her face, and having it thrown back to walk down with. The inconvenience of arranging and adjusting the veil properly at the trying moment was probably the a short piece of tulle over the face, still striving to keep the old-fashioned idea. The veil was pulled off by one of the bridesmaids, and crumpled in her hand, before the "nouvelle mariee" turned to face the world. Now even the bit of tulle has disappeared, and the veil, be it either of lace, net or tulle, is fastened with jewels or an net or tulle, is fastened with jewels or an aigrette of flowers or feathers, to stand high at the back of the head.

Etiquette at a church wedding wills it that the bridesmaids and ushers should give the bride and groom a few seconds "leeway" to drive to the house. They quickly follow, and are found ready ranged on the left side, or on both sides of the young married couple, who then stand in the center at the back of the room to receive constraints.

The ushers act as ushers also at the house, taking the guests up as they come in the room. After all are assembled, the bride makes the move, and, followed by her husband and bridal party, goes to the dining room or wherever the collation is served, cuts her cake, if there is one, takes a bit of lunch, throws her bouquet to her bridesmaids and allow away to absorb her gown maids and slips away to change her gown Her mother, sisters and most intimate friends generally go with her. The groom goes to the room assigned to him.

Then the young people try to slip off, but never can. The guests below are assembled at the foot of the stairs and line the hallways, so amid showers of rice, old slippers and flowers they start off on life's journey.

Mrs. Lottie Adam Raschig, soprano, and Master Thaddeus Rich took part in a concert at Madison Tuesday evening and were warmly received. They were given a hand-some reception Tuesday afternoon by Miss Drusilla Cravens and otherwise entertained socially by the people of Madison. The concert was given at the Madison Hotel before liam P. Kappes.

Miss Lucy Williams will leave the first of of Master Rich: "This was Master Rich's in his teens, a charming manner. a face full of the power of genius, from the first he won the hearts of all. A thrill went through the audience when he brought his bow sharpely over the strings, for the opening passage. Then followed a marvellous delicateness of touch, a masterly knowledge of technique. The most difficult movements glided one after another under his capable hand. Truly, he is called a boy wonder."

Mrs. Raschig sang "With Verdure Clad," from the Creation; "Ah Fors e Lui," from 'Travita; "Dost Thou Know," from Mignon, the "Spring Song," by Coenen. Of the the severest tests offered to our best soprano the notice said: "Possibly it is one of the singers. It requires a voice flexible to the highest degree and one firm enough to give due expression to its most intricate passages. From the earliest sound to its close the audience followed her beautiful voice with breathless interest. Full and mellow, vet capable of attaining the highest notes with ease, she poured forth Haydn's mag-nificent production in a manner never before heard in this city." Of the "Spring Song." it said: "In the latter part were to be found some of the most beautiful passages of the evening. Her voice displayed full power to great advantage. Altogether Mrs. Raschig and Master Rich furnished a rare treat that will go into social musical history as exceptional. Old and New Harvard.

E. S. Martin, in Scribner. There was an old Harvard and there is cent that a graduate of less than twenty years' standing can remember when it be gan to appear. It came with the elective system, and has developed year by year as that system has developed and as students' names have multiplied in the Harvard catalogue. Twenty years ago there were still classes and class feeling at Harvard. Most of the studies of freshman year and nearly half of the sophomore studies were prescribed. There were then about two hunired students in a class. Nowadays a Harvard class has come to e a much larger and looser aggregation of individuals, and the facilities for knitting it together have almost disappeared. Between four and five hundred men now enter college together. Only a single study, English, is prescribed to all of them. All the rest they select, each man choosing what best suits his taste, inclinations and purposes. Most of the elective courses are open to students of several classes and to graduate students, and when a freshman has sorted out the studies he purposes to pursue he finds himself in the lecture or recitation room with an unclassified body of learners, most of them no doubt freshmen like himself, but very likely with plenty of sophomores, too, and possibly with other upper-class men and graduate students. Compulsory prayers have passed out of existence, and he rarely or never sees his own class all together at one time. Indeed, there is not a lecture room in Harvard College that will seat all the members of the present freshman class at once. He rarely ever sees a group of men together in any class room of whom he can be sure that all of them are his classmates.

Hope for Him.
